FIELD PHOTOGRAPHY TIP NO. 9

BEYOND THE SHADOW OF A CAP

Hunters wear caps. Its part of our culture, even when we don't need them to keep the sun out of our eyes or keep our heads warm and dry. We might forget our binoculars or cartridges, but when was that last time you forgot your cap? In field photography we're taught to use the available sun angle to light our subject. This means facing the sun and this often times means cap shadow, sometimes to the point the hunters face is completely in the dark. There are only three remedies for curing cap shadow, 1) Remove the cap... hat head, 2) Tip it back to the point the brim is not casting a shadow... goofy plus squinting, or 3) Use the fill flash on your camera. Even if the light is good, going to full flash with fill in those shaded areas and not blow out the exposure. Try a few shots next time you notice your buddy's face in the dark.

Brian L. Johnson's face is shaded by his hat in this photo with his desert sheep. His trophy ram, scoring 169-7/8 points, was take in 2010 while hunting in Yuma County, Arizona.
