This fine example of a non-typical elk has six normal points on each antler, and seven additional points, resulting in a score for non-typical of well over 400. It was killed by Lou DePaolis on Vermejo Park, New Mexico, in October of 1974. If scored as a typical, it would fail to qualify at the minimum score, due to the extra points.

Twenty-five years ago the possibility of setting up a non-typical American elk category was discussed by the Records Committee, and agreed upon, adding it as the 35th category. With the help of sportsmen and the Rocky Mountain Elk Foundation, 20 high-quality specimens were brought to light and scored, along with the knowledge that more such trophies were in barns, trophy rooms and still roaming the wild.
