TIME WELL SPENT BY MARK LITZELMAN

Excerpt from www.boone-crockett.org

I was eight years old when I saw my first bull moose. It was a behemoth—as does most anything at that age. I was standing outside my grandfather’s basecamp tent, frightened and awestruck at the same time. My grandfather Grizz (Howard Griswold) was with hunters at a higher camp, and I was helping as much as an eight-year-old can help packing with horses.

Thirty-six years later, I still get that feeling when I see moose. And for 20 years, I had been applying for a moose tag in my home state of Colorado. When I found out that I had finally drawn for the fall of 2020, the first thing I did was call up Grizz who is a spry 80 years old. Grizz has been my mentor and the person I’ve always looked up to since I could remember. He’s been there with me on hunts for desert bighorn, mountain goat, elk, deer, and bear. I knew that he wasn’t going to miss this hunt—even if it meant he had to fly in from the U.S. Virgin Islands where he spends his “retirement” as charter-boat captain fishing for mahi, marlin, tuna, and wahoo.

To prepare for my moose hunt, I shot, studied, and scouted every chance I got. The drive from my house to moose country was six hours one way. I had been watching the unit I drew in for seven years. Once I drew the tag and made several trips I wasn’t seeing any moose. There was sign everywhere. I just couldn’t find the moose.

One weekend, I made it just above a drainage I wanted to scout, but time ran out. I had to get back to work. The next week a friend saw photos of a great bull on social media. I was able to get the locations of the pictures, and I was surprised that they had come from the drainage I wanted to explore the week before. I planned to spend the next weekend there, but there was one more place I needed to scout first.

At that spot, I had finally found bull moose! It felt like a huge weight lifted off my shoulders. One bull had a brow tine that drooped like a limp pool noodle. I named him Droptine. He was respectable, but I really wanted something better. Satisfied, I headed to the other drainage.

Right off the bat, I found two bulls feeding. The willows were so tall that I could only see heads and antlers. One bull was slightly larger than Droptine, and he was definitely the one from the post. The other bull was young but had well-formed palms and brow tines. He needed a couple more years to grow. I was about 180 yards away watching through my spotting scope, excited knowing I had a moose tag in my pocket. When I leaned back to take a break, about 100 yards to my right was something that gave me the biggest case of butterflies and chills I’d ever had. “I have moosebumps!” I said.

I laughed, since I meant to say goosebumps. This bull had walked out from behind some willows and scrub pines. It was the biggest moose I’d ever seen, and I’ve been around my share of bull moose. It made me think of that moose I’d seen so long ago while at hunting camp with Grizz. That was the moose I was going to hunt. I just needed to keep track of him for the next six agonizing weeks.
